G H Patel College of Engineering & Technology, Vallabh Vidyanagar

Presently, with the advancement in technologies, power system is transformed into one of the most complex networks. Moreover, use of modern technologies in FACTS, HVDC transmission, renewable energy sources, filters, digital protection schemes, smart grids, etc. need to be analyzed and simulated before implementation to evaluate their effects on existing system. For electrical engineers, it is vital to know how advance models and techniques are useful in modern power system environment to accurately reflect the performance of an individual component and power system as a whole. A Short Term Training Program (STTP) on “Recent trends in Power electronics and power system” was organized by Department of Electrical Engineering at G H Patel College of Engineering and Technology, Vallabh Vidyanagar from 11th June to 16th June, 2018. A total of 45 participants, including UG/PG students and Faculties / Research Scholar from different Degree and Diploma Engineering Institutes of the nation have registered for the event.
